Russian Woman: Keeping the Love Alive

Cheryl Weisz | July 5, 2013 | Russian Women | russian woman, russian woman name, russian woman names

There is no perfect relationship and every so often, staying in love doesn't happen. Still, that should not stop you from aspiring to keep the love alive in your relationship for as long as you can.

There are many reasons why couples end their relationships. Arguing a lot and rushing into things seem to be the leading causes of break-ups; however, experts claim that the chief reason for short lived relationships is having a half-baked perception of what being in a relationship in actuality looks like. This includes the belief that they should never argue and that sex must always be perfect.

Although verbal fights can hurt a relationship, being capable of coping with arguments would ultimately rescue one.

This is apparently the most substantial and appropriate thing lovers can learn to do correctly.

A good type of arguing cleans the air and lets you both feel heeded and accepted. It helps you admit your differences, at the same time, respecting and valuing each other's opinions. This, in fact, makes a relationship inspiring and colorful.

All couples are bound to argue some time in their relationship, but recognizing this as a means to release steam and make good with your partner afterwards would make all the difference.

Give your mate some space and a few moments to cool down. Practice the art of letting go and recognize that arguments are not the end of your relationship.

No matter how much you may not want to accept it, discussing your issues with your mate is the only way you can move forward, regardless if you can or cannot fix them.

For the most part, one partner is concerned with the facts, while the other is more concerned with the feelings, keeping them apart.

Determining how to put into words these things and sharing them with your mate would make your relationship more balanced and would prevent constant misunderstandings and resentments.

Studies show that the best way to get through each other is to provide several positive points to counter each negative point raised. So, next time there is an issue with your mate, back it up with some good things to say.

The key to all long lasting relationships is being aware of how and what makes you feel cherished, and letting your significant other know about it.

Deeds, time, and words are the three ways to channel love. We usually offer what we covet for ourselves, so do a little reflection on this.

A Russian woman, altogether, needs to feel heard and understood. On the other hand, most men consider physical affection as a sign of a Russian woman's love.

Clearly, each one is different that is why telling your partner how you feel is very critical.

Also, knowing that you and your partner are in agreement about certain aspects of your relationship is so important. If your long term plans are completely opposite, then there is no way you would want, or you would be able to stay together.

Feeling that you are on the same page is vital to overcome all the interruptions in your relationship, such as your own sets of friends, your own careers, or your varying activities.

In the olden times, couples who were set up by their parents are not expected to love each other. Their relationship was more of duty and respect.

We have moved on from that, but duty and respect continue to be essential pillars to a fruitful relationship.
